Firstly, Happy New Year to you one and all from us all here at TVC.

With all the festivities out of the way, hopefully we can get back to normal full killing weeks, and routine as many will have noticed we have not had a published SPP since Wednesday 18th December.

As we understand AHDB will be publishing a SPP report today for w/e 21st December. Then as long as they get the information require early this week, they are hopefully going to be back to normal and publish w/e 28th on Wednesday this week (8th January). However, what we do know reference the SPP since the start of last year, it actually only came back 8p/kg, compare to other EU reference prices which came back circa 20p/kg.

As many will already know, although we have a few larger pigs about, we are hoping to move these large pigs over the next week or 2. Whilst looking at forecasts/numbers coming through then it looks like we have all done a good job in getting as many pigs away pre-Christmas/NY in an attempt to not swamp the market into the January/February, when we know most people spend less on food and diet, which often reduces the demand for pig meat over the coming 4-6 weeks. With this in mind (for those who have not yet let us know), could we ask/remind you all to get in touch with your TVC representatives, to give them the most update information reference forecasts, so they can best plan the first quarter of 2025. Sows are back trading this week, with the European markets back online at similar levels to where they ended up pre-Christmas.
